The 2016 Oracle is dedicated in loving memory of Jack Sandler

The following article was originally published in The Colby Echo on December 3rd, 2015:

Jack Sandler, coach of Colby Men's Lacrosse, unexpectedly passed away at age 35 on November 19, 2015. A graduate of Bates College, Coach Sandler coached Skidmore College Men's Lacrosse for eight years before taking charge at Colby in 2013. Guiding his team to a CBB title in his first season, Coach Sandler was widely respected for his immensely positive attitude, genuine care for his players, and love for the sport of lacrosse. Colby Echo Staff Writer and Colby Men's Lacrosse player Russ Ollis '16 reflects on Coach Sandler's untimely passing.

I'll never forget where I was when I heard the dreadful news. I was eating breakfast in Dana when I got the simultaneous email and text. Mandatory meeting at 10 am with the Athletic Director in the Alumni Center - everyone be there. I called a teammate to figure out what was going on.

"Hey what's the deal with this meeting?" I asked, confused.

In a raspy voice, he responded, "Coach died. Had a heart attack last night. The AD will explain." Click.

Completely numb, I made my way across campus to the Alumni Center. I sat motionless while I saw my teammates come piling in, most confused, but there were a handful that had heard the news and were devastated. The AD solemnly told us the news. Coach Sandler had died of a heart attack. He was on a recruiting trip to the West Coast when he had a layover in New York. After delays forced him to check into a hotel, he headed down to hotel's gym for a workout. It was here that Coach suffered his fatal heart attack.

I was in shock for most of that Friday, as were probably the rest of the Colby men's lacrosse team and the Colby community. The next few days were a blur – from the reflections in the Chapel, to the memorial scrimmage and tailgate, to the funeral. The shock eventually gave way to grief. The grief eventually subsided to acceptance. And, oddly enough, the acceptance lead to happiness. I'm filled with happiness because I had the privilege of having Coach Sandler in my life. I'm only sad more of you couldn't have shared my same experiences of having known this areat man.

The overused cliché is that you don't know what you have until it's gone, and while I certainly knew and appreciated everything Coach Sandler did for my team and this school, I couldn't see his profound impact on the lives of so many until this tragedy.

Coach Sandler loved lacrosse. From growing up on Long Island, to his playing days at Bates, and through his coaching days at Skidmore and Colby, Coach Sandler was enthralled with the sport. But to characterize him merely as a lacrosse coach would be a great disservice. He was a connection with the real world – constantly trying to help his players out for post-graduate success. He was a mentor – teaching all of us the proper way to achieve goals. Most importantly, he was a friend. Coach could relate to his players and knew when to push more or when to ease up a bit. He recognized the potential in each of us and pushed us to excellence on the field, in the classroom, and throughout the rest of our lives. I cannot possibly begin to express all that he did for my teammates and me, but I can stress that he cared deeply about each and everyone of us – from the star player to the bench all-star – and was influential in shaping who I am as a person today.

As those who knew the man can attest to, Coach Sandler loved quotes. A teammate joked that he thought Coach spent most of his day just googling inspirational quotes to drop on us. He had a few favorites: "slow is smooth, and smooth is fast." As well as a team-favorite, "the only thing better than being perfect is being done."

But as I bid adieu to my coach, I want to use a quote that I think Coach Sandler would love. As I was leaving Colby at the end of my freshman year, I saw a senior on my team. I approached him and congratulated him on finally being done, and asked if he had any advice for me for the next three years on the Hill. He smiled and shook his head. He said he didn't have any advice for the next three years, but he had a few words he tried to live his life by: "Don't judge. Seize opportunity. Live for the moment. Crush jams. Keep faith. Love wholeheartedly."

I love you, Coach. While I'll miss you, I won't forget the innumerable ways in which you helped me grow and prosper. Thank you, and rest easy. 'ou could talk to him about anything. He was usually the one ho kept the conversation going. He was a leader on the field d off the field. He was here to teach us how to play lacrosse, ut he was also here to teach us to be great men" (Alex Rutan '16, senior captain, Kennebec Journal, Morning Sentinel). "He was a father figure for every player on the team who they could turn to for anything. He genuinely cared about every single person on the team and would do whatever he could to help them succeed... He was a father to all of us and we will never forget everything that he's done for us. We know that he is looking over us now and we plan to honor him with our play this season" (Scott Miller 19', Odyssey) was clear he loved the game of lacrosse and coaching, but his real passion was teaching and helping students develop their full potential physically, intellectually, and personally. We have been incredibly fortunate that Jack has been such an integral part of our community. I join others who will miss him greatly, and our thoughts are with his players, colleagues, and family" (President Greene, Letter to the Campus Community). "Jack was incredibly energetic and warm...He was a classic NESCAC Renaissance man, where he cared a great deal about a sport and loved it, but also loved everything surrounding the sport at his school...He really affected the culture of the lacrosse team. They are the embodiment of what he believed in" (Tim Wheaton, Colby Athletic Director, Portland Press Herald).

A special thank you goes out to the dining hall staff, and the grounds and custodial staff at PPD!

In loving memory of Eva Adams (1959-2015) & Rodney Ferland (1955-2015)

From Jim Terhune to the Campus Community: "Rodney Ferland, a longtime member of the Colby grounds crew... retired from the College in September 2015 following 37 years of quiet but dedicated service tending to Colby's lawns, plantings, roadways, and ice rink. His most visible role was running the Zamboni for many years, and he took great pride in keeping the ice in optimal playing condition for Colby and area athletes.

a Adams was a member of Colby's dining services staff since 2001. Eva was most recently assigned to the deli station in Dana dining hall, where she joyed serving hundreds of students every day. She touched the lives of students throughout the years and was a valued colleague and good friend to many. Eva lived in Fairfield and is survived by her husband John."

resident Greene to the Campus Community: "The fragility of life was also apparent on our campus last week when we learned that three members four staff had passed on due to unrelated illnesses. One of those staff members was Eva Adams, who died unexpectedly of a cardiac event. Below I are an excerpt from her obituary, which demonstrates our potential for bringing joy and fulfillment to one another through our daily interactions and the generous spirit that animates our community.

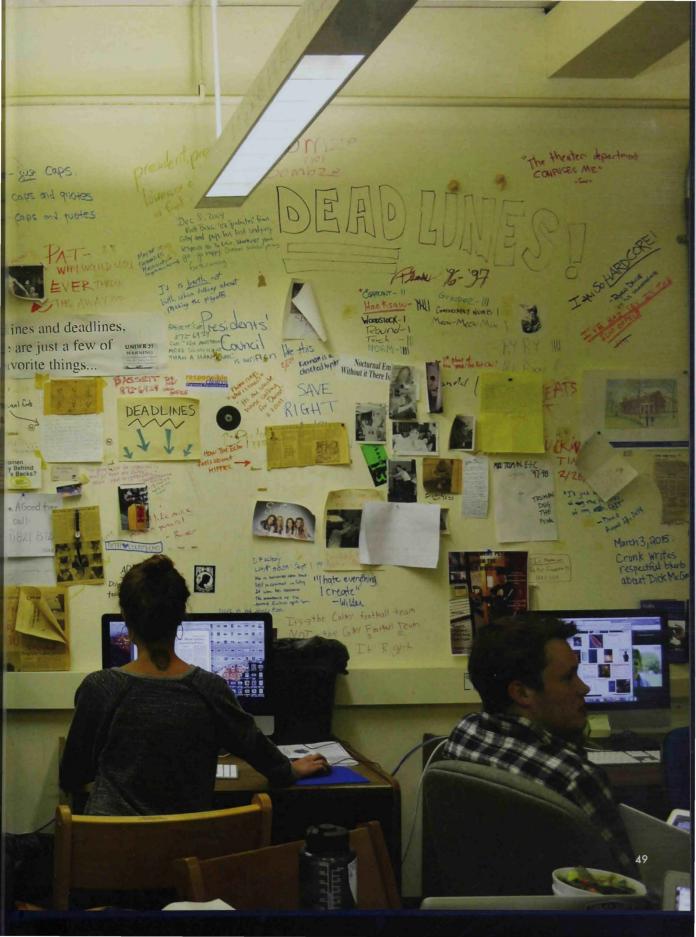

'Eva went on to apply for a food service position with Sodexo at Colby College and worked in Dana Dining Hall for close to 15 years. While Eva certainly could have explored other opportunities over the years, her source of enjoyment came from the countless Colby students, faculty and dining nall coworkers she interacted with daily. It was not unusual for Eva to memorize not only the names of the students who went through her deli line, but e also learned where they were from, their likes and dislikes and their dietary preferences and restrictions. Eva was, in many ways, like a second mom o some of the students. She never tired from sharing stories about them with her family and friends. She was especially honored when a Colby student asked her to wear his jersey at a recent football game, despite her not being an avid sports fan.

Although Eva earned various awards of appreciation throughout her time at Sodexo, she preferred to remain out of the spotlight. Although she was described by those who knew her as shy and reserved, she took pride in attending town meetings, learning about the town's history, and keeping up with local and statewide news. Eva would frequently offer rides to her coworkers and anonymously supplied self-care items to those in need. Eva and her husband Jack were life partners and complimented one another well."

n excerpt from Rodney Ferland's obituary: "Rodney was born in Waterville on Jan. 19, 1955, to Helena Ferland and Ray Gary. He leaves behind brother, Roger Ferland and his wife Sarah of Albion, along with nieces and nephews. Rodney graduated from Waterville High School, after which he attended Unity College. He then went to work at Colby College in 1978. He worked for 37 years in the P.P.D department before retiring this year. Rodney was very well known around campus. He was known for making the best ice around and for driving the big mower."

Colby College! How are we feeling today? That is your opportunity to get it all out as noise. How are we feeling today? I'm not sure I can put into words exactly how I feel. What if that was it? I gave this the old college try, but I got nothing. No, I have some things to say.

I will forewarn everybody that my lowest grade at Colby was in logic, so good luck following along. Okay. Alright.

Welcome everyone. It is my honor to represent the varied, talented, and joyful Class of 2016. I'm here today to spread good feeling, because what's happening today is a good thing. We're finishing something. After today, what's happened here will be whole.

That's a nice thought most of us are going to forget about in a hot second when we're packing our lives away. If you live on campus, this is a friendly reminder, and I quote from an email written in all caps, "YOU MUST VACATE YOUR ROOM BY 8 P.M. ON MAY 22nd." "Vacate" being the operative word. Why are we here? We're losing precious packing time. My poor father is here physically, but mentally he is packing the car. He's not hearing a word I'm saying, he's like, "Where are we going to put that lamp?"

I digress.

I remember when I first got accepted to Colby everyone said the same thing, "Colby College. Good school, good school, good school, "People talk about Colby like it's milk. Like it's good for you. Builds strong bones! I feel like that sentiment does carry over to the kinds of people here. There is a goodness that abides even in those moments when we're most confused about who we are as an institution. We, the Class of 2016, but everyone here bound by this beautiful campus-isn't that the other thing people always say? "Beautiful campus, beautiful campus"—we have the chance to be Colby people, people who have an unshakable goodness, humility, and warmth and know how to have a good time and appreciate what discovery and making connections feels like.

I arrived at Colby with the same questions the rest of my fellow classmates had. What am I doing here? Who am I? And who really is Bill Lin? Bill is a delight, but the jury is still out on all those questions. In fact, Colby has taught me to let go of myself and let in possibility. The most important moments for me in college came when I realized I was wrong. When I realized I am complicit in the things that I usually think I'm on the right side of. That I am not only capable of racism, sexism, elitism, homophobia, and transphobia, but that these things sneak up on you when you think you're paying attention and determine our behavior every day. I'm trying to be mindful. Thank you, Colby.

Four years. I've seen Colby grow as I have. During our freshman year Colby celebrated its bicentennial. We learned about Colby's history, about Elijah Lovejoy, Mary Low, the chapel takeover, and the memories that makes us Mules. We also saw Bro interrupted on stage during his bicentennial address. Remember that? Since our first year, we've been engaged in active conversations about where this college is going, informed by what it's been. As this class has gotten older, I've noticed Colby becoming more vocal in addressing the things that we're not proud of. I think that has something to do with how we arrived here and were welcomed into a 200-year history that is marked by moments of progressive change.

During our sophomore year I was very excited to feel as though I was apart of one of those moments when it was announced that David Greene was selected as the new president. Since President Greene arrived here, I feel as if we've een comparing ourselves to what we could be. We are proud of our history but are forward thinking, and those two things o not always go hand in hand. Once we were all together again, back from abroad for our senior year, there has been n increase in the amount of civil discourse posts, bringing our attention to moments when what we can be and what we're olding onto may be clashing. I'm proud to be a part of a class that I feel is responsible for engaging in the often difficult sk of active progress, of listening, debating, apologizing, and being vulnerable to being wrong. I've witnessed so many of y classmates here display their pride for this place by making their voices heard. I hope the impact left by this class is one i making sure that we keep conversations going.

ut anyway, none of that matters now because we have to get out of here. There are some people to thank before we do.

would first like to say that it's my honor to share the stage with Arianna Huffington today. We are actually a more fitting uo than you might expect. She's written a new book about sleeping, The Sleep Revolution, and it just so happens that I did project for my seventh-grade science fair on the very same subject. Being the future liberal arts scholar that I was, my search question was: "Do we need sleep?" My hypothesis was, yes. My methods were staying up for 24 hours straight nd taking a picture of myself every hour to see if I would look more tired as time went on. Low and behold, I did. I did only ade it to hour 22 though. Arianna and I have reached similar conclusions: We need sleep, America. It's a revolution!

Jur parents! Please give it up for parents. Hi, Mom! My parents, Buddy and Donna Leonard, from Peabody, 1assachusetts, against sound reason have let me follow my own path. They paid for me to study clowning, and I still can't ggle. I am because of your trust, and it led me here. For that and for everything, thank you.

Jur professors. We have professors here that are what we want to be when we grow up, but treat us like we already are.

eans, like Jed Wartman and Dr. B! Campus Life, all of the offices and the people who exist largely as constant characters our email inboxes. I hope I finally get to meet you today, Elizabeth Schiller.

ne workers of Sodexo: like Terry, Julie, Dottie, Roxanne, and Ms. Mary. I have enjoyed my meals, thank you.

PD and the custodial staff. I believe PPD is on the sidelines now, positioned like the track team, ready to clean these chairs o. Thank you for making this campus beautiful, and I'm sorry that alcohol.edu is only so effective.

d like to give a shout-out to two underappreciated Kims. Kim Kenniston, who works for Campus Life and is in charge of ousing, tells a lot of people "no" for the first time in their lives and gets a lot of flak. She loves a hard job. Mama Kim Au rorks the late shift at the Spa and keeps order when everyone's order receipts are gone. Thank you Kims.

am going to miss this community so much. It's not just about the people I know the most or I'm closest with, but about the nes I don't, but we stop our days anyway, we look at each other, we say hello, and indulge in that shared memory thatever it is, and it happened here, so, no matter what, there's some unshakeable goodness to take pleasure in. A reason stop. A reward for courtesy. Each member of this class, I miss you all already. Let's stay in touch.

here's so many people to thank, but the future is coming in hot! To my classmates, as our Colby bubble bursts: We're raduating because we've done the work, we've studied, practiced, rehearsed, and they didn't find out about any of that uff we did. We're ready! Let's give ourselves a hand.

n conclusion and in summary-"You miss 100 percent of the shots you don't take." Wayne Gretzsky!

2016 Commencement Address Arianna Huffington

Cofounder, president, and editor-in-chief of the Huffington Post

Honorary Degree Recipient

Thank you so much President Greene, Chairman of the Board of Trustees Bob Diamond, members of the platform party, faculty, staff, students, and families. But who is Billy Line Okay, Brendon, you and I have to talk ofter this. I can't live without knowing the answer to this fundamental, existential question.

So especially being here as a Greek immigrant-yes, that's a slight accent you hear-I am thrilled that I can finally say I made it to the Mayflower, or at least to the Mayflower Hill, and that there are 32 flags here representing the 32 countries that have graduates today. That is such a great achievement for the College, for the families, for everyone involved. And I have graduates today.

As a mother of two not-so-long-ogo college groduotes, I know that the hord work leading up to today is a team effort. So congratulations to all the moms and the dads and the grondparents and the siblings. But above oil, congratulations to the Closs of 2016.

And Brendon, a special congrotulations to you. That was a great speech. I fully expect to hear a lot from you back in New York City, and when you create the next "Hamilton"-level hit, can you please promise me two tickets without having to mortgage my home?

And congrotulations to Bannie Maldonado. Winning an award for engaged citizenship is just about the best it can get. And thank you for all you're doing to make our world a better place

This is such an amazing day of contrasts, of a light being shined on two different worlds – ane world that's ending, another world that's just beginning. And these two worlds are different in many other ways. The world you're leaving is structured toward o purpose, organized to help you realize that purpose. The motto of the world you're leaving is "lux Mentis Scientia," – "Knowledge is the light of the mind."

But the world you're stepping into is very different. It's a chootic world, filled with the clamor of buzzing, blinking, and flashing digital distractions, o world drowning in data, but starved for real knowledge and wisdom. If knowledge is the light of the mind, row data is fag and haze. And your challenge is to find your way through the fag. And an even greater challenge is that you endeavor not just to succeed in the world, but to change it.

But before I get to that new world you're entering, I want to say a little about the world you're leaving. And having stalked you in the last few weeks on your social media accounts, your official Calby website, and your Tinder profiles - actually, just kilding about Tinder - if so very special world you're been immersed in. And I must say I'm a little sad I missed "Daghead, the night where, so I understand, you stay up all night, passibly drink a little bit, with the goal of bringing in the sunrise together with friends. As a vehement sleep evangelist. I should be frowing at the staying up all night part, but it's in service of something special so I'm willing to make an exception because as Hannah Schofer wrate in The Calby Echo, "there is no better feeling than watching that sunrise with the people we lave of the callege that brought us together."

And ofter "Daghead," and bringing in the sunrise tagether, I would hape that the Colby Napping Club saw o surge of participation. Congratulations to the founder of the club. Thomas Gregstan, who is helping to correct the historical error of another Thomas. Thomas Edison, who was convinced that sleep was unnecessary. Edison bragged that he never needed more than four or five hours a night, and believed that America should follow his example on the brightly lit path of progress and self-improvement. He colled sleep "on absurdity, a bod habit," and fully expected it to be eliminated from our lives. Modern science is solidly on the side of Thomas Gregston not Thomas Edison.

Now, I need to ask parents and grandparents and innocent children to cover their ears for a mament as I address ane piece of Colby mythology - am I sofe to proceed? - the business about the blue light on top of Miller Library, a light that will only go out when a virgin graduates. Sadly, I have no research or wisdom to affer you on the connection between blue light and Colby virgins, but I can offer you some research on the connection between blue light and sleep. What we know from sleep scientists is that blue light, of the kind given off by our ubiquitaus electronic devices, is kryptantie when it comes to sleep. And the trouble is, our houses, our bedrooms, ore littered with beeping, vibrating, flashing blue-light-radiating devices. Though we don't give much thought to how we put aurselves to bed, we have little recharging shrines all over our houses, like little doll beds, where our technology can recharge, even ^{II} we con't give and the text better care of our smortphanes than we take care of ourselves.

So as you are about to enter this new world that considers burnout, exhaustion, and stress as the necessary price to pay for success, I urge you to change what is simply a collective delusion – one that your generation has the ability to shatter.

Cultures aften believe things that are simply wrong. For example, once upon a time, smaking was considered glamarous and cool. As late as the 1960's, in fact, there were still television and complete with doctars in while lab coats, promoting cigarettes. As one doctor put it at the time, "I smake menthals because they refresh my throat." It took a while before the perception of smaking fell in line with the science of smaking. Well, the science of sleep and sleep deprivation is now in, and it's up to your generation to bring the perception of sleep in line with the conclusive science foster than my generation did with smaking.

Of course, you're already experts on at least one culture that glorifies sleep deprivation: college culture. The motto "sleep, grades, social life; pick twa" – or some version of it – can be heard on compuses across America. It's as though college students feel as if they're forced to choose between sleep and life. This is why we launched the HuffPast Sleep Revolution College Tour at more than 300 colleges across the country, to raise awareness about the importance of sleep. And I hope you all received my gift of The Sleep Revolution to arm you with all the science and the best practices you need to enter the workplace with a competitive advantage – challenging the Neanderthal norms that still prevail in for tao many offices around the country where people are congratulated for working 24/7 – the cognitive equivalent of coming to work drunk.

As we now know fram an ever-growing mountain of sleep science, every quality involved in job performance - creativity, productivity, problem solving, the ability to collaborate, to handle stress, to learn - is enhanced by sleep and degraded by sleep deprivation. It's the person who has the self-discipline and the confidence and the perspective to unplug and recharge, to handle remain tethered to their email inboxes at all hours, to make time in their lives for downtime, for imagination, and for wonder, who should be admired, emulated, and promoted in the workplace.

And it's the ones who brag about only needing four hours of sleep that we should be wary of, especially if they're running for president. There is, for example the presumptive Republican presidential naminee who brags about how little sleep he gets, and how he sleeps with his phone beside him. What effects does that have? Well, there's the inability to process even ba information, mood swings, anger autbursts, false memories, lack of impulse control, belligerence, paranaid tendencies to spout conspiracy theories, and things like retweeting Mussalini Those are all, as it happens, symptoms of chronic sleep deprivation. Except possibly the Mussalini bit – that's probably just Trump.

So whether you're running for president or just about to enter the workplace. sleep is the ultimote performance-enhancing drug - and one without side effects, if you dan I count bed-head wh apparently some young people actually want, therefore it's not a side effect, it's a bonus feature.

S aw about this as a tiny first step that's both symbolic and practical: resolve to wake up without an alarm. You can set your alarm as a precaution, but the goal should be to wake up moly before it after a full night's sleep, which unless you have a genetic mutation, is seven to nine hours. And for those who skipped Biology 101, you cannot train yourself to have a g stic mutation. And only one percent of the population does. But, Colby graduates, I bring you some goad news. By gene editing, you can implant a "short sleep" gene in embryos and th shorten the sleep needs of your unborn children. Of course, goad luck with babies that only need four hours of sleep!

hink about the word "alorm": "a sudden fear or distressing suspense caused by an awareness of danger – a signal that something is nat right." So we emerge from sleep in full fight-ormode, flooded with stress hormones and adrenaline as our bady readies itself for danger.

when you wake up without on alarm you're more likely to remember your dreams. And dreams have throughout history been the source of new ideas, insights, art, and scientific kthroughs. The periodic table of elements, the Beatles' "Let It Be," even Google, that repository of our entire waking world, were all conceived in a dream. As Larry Page put it, "When a y great dream shows up, grab it!" And our dreams are also a gateway to life's mystery, to the recognition that we are more than our doily struggles, projects and to a lists, more than uccesses and our failures. By helping us keep the world in perspective, sleep, and the connection with ourselves it allows, gives us a chance to refocus on the essence of who we are.

B even if performance and winning are, at least for now, everything for you, you can be easily convinced of the benefits of sleep by looking at what's going an in a world that is the ultimate in agmatism: the sports world. To professional athletes, sleep is not about spirituality, work-life balance, or even health and well-being; it's all about performance. It's about what works. And this is a performance enhancer includes the Wha's Who of the sports world, from Kabe Bryant and Tam Brady to Roger Federer and Andre Iguadala.

anford, a sleep researcher, Cheri Mah, ran an experiment an members of the Stanford basketball team. She had them sleep normally for two weeks, and then had them increase their a to eight and-a-half hours for five more weeks. The results? Free-throw shooting went up by nine percent, three-point shooting by 9.2 percent. That's an amazing difference for such elite tes-and all achieved just by sleeping more.

in the relation our collective delusion that burnout is essential for success, another thing I ask you to change is our everyday language around sleep ond burnout. Language matters – it reflects and guides how we think about our world and what we value. But everywhere we turn, sleep deprivation is glamorized and celebrated: "You snooze, you lose." Or look at the use "catch o few zis": the last lefter of the alphabet used to represent the last thing on our culture's shored priority list.

that goes hand in hand with how we glamorize burnout and overwork. "I'm slammed" has become a way of saying, "I am important and I'm very much in demand." And laak ot all the r similar words we use in our everyday experience: "I'm swamped, I'm drowning, I'm underwoter. I'm crazed. I'll get back to you when I come up for air." In any other cantext, hearing a d say something like this would make you call 911. And living in that state of mind - a perpetually stressed-out fight-or-flight state of mind, always on the edge of burnout - has serious icotions for your health, your productivity, and your happiness.

singing the culture of work needs to begin by changing how we talk about work-and how we talk about sleep.

next thing to change has to do with your attention. It's one of the most important currencies available to you and one which is only gaing to increase in value.

u talk to people in the tech sector - and that's part of my job - it's clear that what they wont, more than anything, what's at the center of their business plans for growth, is your ottention. e new world you're entering, your attention is the most valuable currency of the digital age...much more valuable than Bitcoin.

nponies may be using different algorithms, different bells and whistles, different sales pitches to get you to port with your attention, but attention is the unifying holy grail. The grab for our inition is the new gold rush. So all of you, just starting out in life, are actually sitting on a gold mine - a gold mine you're carrying with you all the time. I'm mining a little bit of your attention r now, or at least I hope I am. And if I'm not, well, I'm probably the only Commencement speaker in the country who would take it as a personal victory if you happen to be sleeping right shapchat superstor and modern-day philosopher D.) Khaled, who was HulfPast's guest at the White House Correspondents' Dinner, might say, "THEY want you to give them your nition. But major key alert, Calby graduates, your attention is the most valuable thing you gat." So don't give it to them without getting something valuable in return – because otherwise unalogy will eat away at the edges of many of the very things that moke you human. Like how we connect to one another, and how we connect to ourselves.

re has to be part of our attention that is not available to be captured and colonized every moment of every day. We need to reclaim part of our lives and to nurture the idea of our intian as something sacred that needs to be safeguarded and protected-until this becomes a new cultural norm.

I if that new cultural norm is going to be established, it's going to take you and your generation to make it happen. It was my generation that allowed the strip mining of our attention and vhat makes us uniquely human, and ignored the dangers. We were so dazzled by all the possibilities of all these new tech tools that we become blinded to the costs. So it has to be your erotion that can claw back and restore this delicate and essential ecosystem.

world you're heading into is o world in which always being connected has been a stotus symbol, a sign of success. It's o world riddled with anxiety, where if someone emails you or texts and you don't immediately respond, people go crazy. You wait i 5 minutes before responding to someone's text and they're practically calling local emergency rooms for you! This is our tion, but diminished real connection. It's a world of what has been called "continuous portial attention." Fortunately, there's a growing cultural awareness of this problem, and even a word lescribe the alternative of FOMO-fear of missing out-JOMO, the joy of missing out! Missing out an the insignificant, the transient, the trivial in order to not miss out on your life.

I now, Colby graduates, you have a chance to change this. And thase who take the lead will be the new pioneers, the early adopters - until we get to a place where it's normal and eptable to give each other permission to disconnect from technology - and truly reconnect with each other and auselves. And there's an added layer of significance to this, given that by was the first college in the country to issue email accounts to all its students. So I just want to ask: Are you regretting it? Email, as we all know, is one of the major attention thieves. In the r decode, we've gone from an estimated 12 billion emails a day to 215 billion. And according to a recent study, it takes us sixty-seven seconds just to recover from each email that lands unin-baxes.

os you leave here today. I hope you toke with you a renewed and zealous commitment to safeguarding your attention. There will be more and more claims on it – so have the courage t when you have succeeded at changing the culture of burnout and sleep deprivation:

saying "I'll sleep when I'm dead" will be unceremoniously tossed into the dustbin of history.

sple will list their healthy sleep habits as an item on their résumés, LinkedIn pages, and Tinder profiles - and on their Presidential campaign websites.

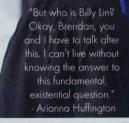

eping pill TV commercials will be a thing of the post. No more beautiful, happy people leading perfect lives while a norrator reads a terrifying list of side effects.

d because we are all addicted to our devices, an app will be created that turns our smortphone into a dumbphone for special times. Like commencements, weddings, your honeymoon, or honging aut with your friends, or having dinner with your children – all times that deserve your undivided attention. And you will not be able to override it.

se of you who master the ability to be alane with yourselves, undistracted by all the endless digital claims on your attention will rule the world. And this in the end is my wish for you – I you will use this newfound mastery and all your ambition, your creativity, and your wisdom not just to rule the world, but to do something for more important - to change the world.

Speak your truth quietly and clearly; and listen to others, even to the dull and ignorant; they too have their story.

Avoid loud and aggressive persons, they are vexations to the spirit. If you compare yourself with others, you may become vain and bitter, for always there will be greater and lesser persons than yourself.

Enjoy your achievements as well as your plans. Keep interested in your own career, however humble; it is a real possession in the changing fortunes of time

Exercise caution in your business affairs, for the world is full of trickery. But let this not blind you to what virtue there is; many persons strive for high ideals, and everywhere life is full of heroism. Be yourself. Especially do not feign affection. Neither be cynical about love; for in the face of all aridity and disenchantment it is as perennial as the grass.

Take kindly the counsel of the years, gracefully surrendering the things of youth.

Nurture strength of spirit to shield you in sudden misfortune. But do not distress yourself with dark imaginings. Many fears are born of fatigue and loneliness.

Beyond a wholesome discipline, be gentle with yourself. You are a child of the universe no less than the trees and the stars; you have a right to be here

And whether or not it is clear to you, no doubt the universe is unfolding as it should. Therefore be at peace with God, whatever you conceive Him to be.

And whatever your labors and aspirations, in the noisy confusion of life, keep peace with your soul. With all its sham, drudgery and broken dreams, it is still a beautiful world. Be cheerful. Strive to be happy.*

We knew this day would come, but we never knew what an adventure it would be. You were born with wings to take you anywhere you want to go. Wherever those wings take you, you're going to soar. Never underestimate all the wonderful things you're capable of, the impact of your dreams and ideas, your uniqueness and all you have to offer the world. Never underestimate the special person you are now and the one you have the power to become. You are more courageous than you think and wiser than you know. With a mind full of ambition you worked hard to prove success can be yours. This is an exciting time, both an ending and a beginning. We wish you laughter to help meet life's many challenges, friends to share your joy, and dreams to guide your way. Earning your degree is an outstanding accomplishment, but the way you've chosen to use your talents is an inspiration. Always stay true to yourself and you'll make the world a better place, changing lives as you go and showing what it means to live with devotion, integrity, and passion. You deserve this success. Your future lies deep inside of you waiting to be discovered. Look out world - we're sending one of our best out to you! We look forward to this new chapter in your life. Dad was your biggest supporter and he is smiling down at his son, so full of love and pride at who you have become.

Congratulations and all our love always, Mom and Sam \overline{xo}

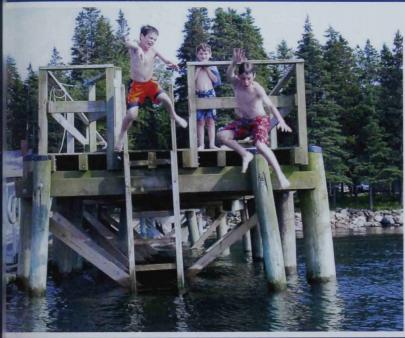

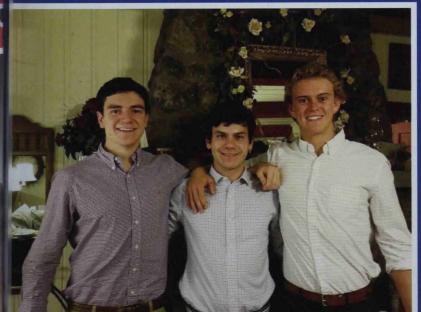

Congratulations – we are so proud of you today and everyday. Seek the Joy!

Love, Mom and Dad, Brigham, Cameron, & Sadie

Congrats Sarah Jeanne Shimer!

Here's to the good times and more to come!

Hunter,

It's so hard to believe that you are a college graduate! You have been blessed with so many great friends and memories from your years at Colby. I hope you know how much I admire your character, work ethic and compassion. I can't wait to follow your next adventure.

"For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, says the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you a future and a hope." (Jeremiah 29:11)

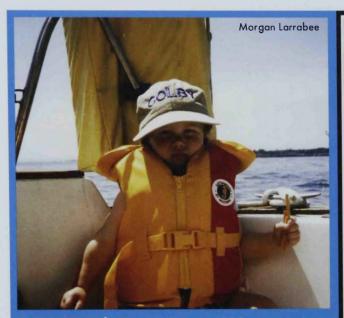

Congratulations Morgan! You are on your way. So very proud of your accomplishments and looking forward to an exciting future for you! Love, Mom, Dad, and Maeve

"In matters of style, swim with the current; in matters of principle, stand like a rock." -Thomas Jefferson

We are so proud of you, Brendan!

Love, Mum and Dad

Congratulations Erik!

We are thrilled with what you have explored, dared to do and accomplished. May you continue to explore and may your gifts, desires, and needs in the world converge to bring you deep joy as you bring us great joy! - Love, Mom, Dad and Emma
