SYNOPSIS

1. Investigation concerning Subject's activities from about August 1950 to about June 1952, covering employment and including interview of three and one disclosed that Subject was considered an introvert, anti-social, and miserly. terminated Subject's employment due to tardiness and unreliability and declined to recommend.

BACKGROUND

2. Originator indicated that Subject was an applicant for employment (type and location not indicated) and requested investigation of Subject's associations and activities with emphasis on character, conduct and political inclinations. The originator provided only the information that Subject was employed on Guam, M.I. between 10 March 1951 and 25 April 1952 with the Office of Price Stabilization (OPS).

EMPLOYMENTS

3. On 7 February 1967,

Source advised that OPS, which was a carry over of OPA, had a limited number of personnel on Guam and went out of existence in about May 1952. Source advised that no personnel records were maintained locally and could only speculate that the records were retained at the Federal Records Center. The interviewee recalled that Subject was working for a local firm (identity unrecalled) and filed an application with OPS. Subject was hired as the Public Information Officer (PIO) and was mainly concerned with press releases during employment for about a year. Subject was terminated when the local offices started to close, and source had no further contact with Subject. Source characterized Subject as an intelligent but, by his own admission, an anti-social type person. He explained that Subject was very introverted and mingled with people only to the minimal extent required for his work. Source advised that he occasionally considered Subject emotionally unstable. He explained that in addition to the aforementioned traits, Subject was also a miserly person who presented a very unkempt appearance. Source related that Subject was single but gave an indication that he had been divorced for a long time. Subject lived alone in a now defunct quonset area and appeared indifferent to the fact that he could have lived in other than a slum area. Source advised that Subject would have been replaced if there had been another qualified person available. Subject was considered reliable, trustworthy and discreet in his work habits; however, Subject's occasional argumentative attitude and degrading of people made him a difficult person to work with, according to source. Subject was considered basically a loyal citizen; however, source recalled that Subject was against U.S. involvement in the Korean conflict. In summation, source stated that basically, he considered Subject suitable for employment with a U.S. government agency and recommended him with reservations. Source explained that he would recommend Subject only for work where Subject would be supervised and not come in close contact with other employees or outside personnel.

4. On 7 February 1967,

| was interviewed in his office and claimed knowledge of Subject, | for a period of about five months in early 1952. Source stated that "if ever there was a person to remember, it was him (Subject)". explained that Subject was one of the most miserly persons he had ever met. Source recalled that Subject usually wore the same clothes and had a generally unclean appearance about him most of the time. Source claimed that Subject rarely bought food, and it was occasionally noted that he ate the food left by others at various tables in a restaurant. Subject's lunches consisted of a bag of fruit or vegetables which he had acquired either from neighbors or in the wild. Source recalled that Subject apparently performed an adequate job in his position, although, his job as PIO was inconsistent with his self-admitted anti-social attitude. Source disclaimed awareness of any adverse information concerning Subject's integrity, sobriety, associations or loyalty. Source claimed that, except for the aforementioned idiosyncrasies, Subject's employment with a government agency would be consistent with the best interests of the U.S.

5. On 7 February 1967,
interviewed

was

| He recalled that Subject, who was an employee of the Guam Daily News, filed an application for and was hired as the PIO for about the final year of the agency's operation on Guam. In conversations, source ascertained that Subject had previously been employed at Oak Ridge, Tennessee and had come to Guam due to some type of allergy. Source claimed that with the exception of his unclean appearance and miserly attitude, Subject exhibited no characteristics which reflected adversely on his stability, integrity, reliability or loyalty. Source advised that he considered Subject rehirable, but only if there were no other qualified person available. Source advised that Subject was self-employed, as a junk dealer, after termination with OPS. Subject apparently stayed on Guam only a few months after leaving OPS and, according to source, then transferred his junk business to Okinawa.

| stated that he had no further contact with Subject after 1952; however, an unrecalled person indicated that Subject married a girl from the Virgin Islands and was recently working in the Philippines. Source concluded by stating that he would recommend Subject.

6. On 8 February 1967, after unproductive efforts were made to obtain employment records,

| Guam Daily News,

| was interviewed

Source recalled [redacted] had placed an ad in a San Francisco, California newspaper for a reporter for the Guam Daily News, and that Subject responded to the ad. Subject was hired after a brief interview [redacted] but after about five or six months employment in late 1951, [redacted] terminated him. [redacted] characterized Subject as a ragged, dirty, miserly, unreliable and untrustworthy person. He explained that Subject was consistently one to two hours late for work, and that Subject either failed to return from assignments or returned with no information. Source claimed that Subject went to extremes in attempting to save all his money. Source was unaware of Subject's motivations; however, he claimed that Subject's appearance was obnoxious to the office and persons with whom he came in contact. Source advised that various unrecalled persons indicated that Subject was observed taking the tips from tables in various restaurants; however, source admitted that he was never able to confirm this rumor. Source claimed that he had no further contact with Subject after termination and was, therefore, unaware of any other local employments of Subject. The interviewee stated that, based on his foregoing observations of Subject, he would decline to recommend Subject for any position associated with the U.S. government. The interviewee stated, however, that he would not be willing to incorporate these matters into the form of a statement or testify at any possible hearing. He claimed that by so doing, he might tend to incriminate himself and subject himself to embarrassment or law suits.

AGENTS NOTE: Efforts to locate other employment or neighborhood sources met with negative results.

AGENCY CHECKS

7. Files of the Guam Police Department (10 FEB 1967) and the 41st District Office of Special Investigations (10 FEB 1967) disclosed no identifiable derogatory information concerning Subject.

NIS/NISO FILES

8. Files of NAVINVSERVO Marianas contained no information pertinent to this investigation in addition to that set forth herein.
