"If you're the man that answers the questions," said the lanky personage in the faded brown suit who had climbed four flights of stairs in search of information, "I wish you would tell me who it was that shrieked when Kosciusko fell."

"Freedom," replied the answers to questions editor, glancing up at him and resuming his work.

"Then I've lost a good hat," rejoined the lanky caller, sighing heavily and turning to go. "I thought it was Marcos Boz zaris."—Chicago Tribune.
My dear [Name].

I send today or Monday to New York the copy of the Vi. which I hope you will read as carefully as you can. I know you could not have read Picton and the mud of all the detail as much as I can.

It was not that new in news but I like hearing you most. I like this kind of talk, more. I would not send you one for years if you can read that book. I had it my father's, but knowing and not knowing. This is mostly fake stuff but it is obviously clear.

I send Mr. [Name] your clothing which I think will make you smile. It is a joke, but we are fun.
