According to the US Geological Survey, worldwide sea levels would rise by 14.61 meters if the Greenland and West Antarctic IceSheets were to melt due to global climate change. The red area demonstrates the land that would be under water near and around Acadia National Park if this catastrophic scenario were to occur.