SENIOR LAST CHAPEL.

Last chapel for the senior class was held Thursday morning. The class led by the marshal, Galen Sweet, formed at Chemical Hall and marched to the chapel. There the exercises were in charge of the class chaplain, Gordon Gates. After prayer and the scripture reading, Prof. Taylor gave the address. He said in part that college had taught the discipline of the ancients, the wisdom of philosophy, had placed the laws and secrets of nature before the student. Hitherto he has profited by the wisdom of others, now he would go forth into the world and learn for himself what life had in store for him. "This is a signal for you to go 'over the top,'" he continued, "and unless your teachers have misjudged you, you will come back laden with the spoils of victory. To the newcomers, the world seems cold, critical and skeptical, yet it is a just world, intending to give every man what he deserves. The world puts you to a test, a test of courage, of self mastery, prudence, and justice, the ofur cardinal virtues.

"It should be your purpose in life to seek the acquaintances of some one whom you can take as a model—who has a certain charm of personality, insight and sagacity, and as saints of old, we, today should measure our acts and motives under the divine model. It is our models and ideas that make us what we are."

In closing, Prof. Taylor said, "among ambitions do not neglect to seek admission to the best society within your reach. The benefits derived from this may be cherished and carried with us to the end of our days."

FRESHMAN READING.

The final exhibition in the Freshman Reading Contest of the Men's Division was held Wednesday afternoon, first prize of ten dollars being awarded to George B. Wolstenholme, and the second prize of five dollars being divided between Marlin D. Farnum and Walter R. Guthrie.

MAINE 5, COLBY 4.

The baseball players went to Orono Wednesday for the last game of the season with Maine and came back with a 5 to 4 defeat pinned on them, although the men played excellent ball and according to all reports did not deserve a defeat. The umpiring was extremely poor, this being conceded by Maine even.

The Colby team played great ball in the field, and "Buck" had almost perfect support. If the men had hit a little harder they would have won without a doubt. Heyes and Nourse played perfect games, and made some remarkable plays. Nourse also laced out a long three-base hit.

FROM GEORGE OTIS SMITH, '93.

A communication was received this week from George Otis Smith, '93, Director of the United States Geological Survey. This letter is a description by Mr. Smith of the impression made upon him when he met Sergeant York, who has been called the greatest hero of the war. Sergeant York is from the mountains of the south and is a member of a sect which is opposed to war. Nevertheless Sergeant York went to war, and captured and killed more Germans than any other one man. Mr. Smith says:

Heroes do not disappoint even though they may fail to measure up to popular specifications. I had the opportunity of meeting the popular hero of the American Army, Sergeant Alvin C. York, who was at the Capitol with Judge Hull, the representative from Tennessee and the author of the Income Tax Law. I at once identified the Congressman's companion, chiefly by his decorations, although of course I had in mind that Sergeant York was a Tennessean and was due in Washington at this time.

He did not however look the part of a hero and as I had the opportunity of talking with him, he did not talk the part. Judge and Mrs. Hull were waiting with the Sergeant for another Congressman, Mr. Byrns, to come up and then the poor hero was to again subject himself to the rapid fire of the camera. While they were waiting I improved the chance to talk with the Sergeant after the congressman had gone to the trouble of identifying me with my official position and the kind of work the Geological Survey does in the mountains of Tennessee.

York is not a typical looking mountaineer, being now rather better set up although slight in stature, nor is he as tall as represented in the newspaper and magazine descriptions, at least I seemed to be looking right into his eyes and therefore doubt if he is quite six feet. The only suggestion of any special talent for scrapping comes in his abundant red hair which stands up like the hair on the shoulders of a fighting dog. His voice is also a disappointment to the searcher for the heroic because he is soft-spoken and slow of speech, with the pleasing tones of the South. He at once gives the impression of intelligence and calm command of himself mentally, quite unaffected by meeting strangers, though I suppose he has become somewhat hardened to the admiring glances of his countrymen. On my asking him if he was not anxious to get back to Tennessee his reply was "any place in the United States seems good now. I do not like the climate of France; it rains nine months in the year there." The deliberateness with which he mentions these climatic observations suggested that he had been simply a casual traveler in France, possibly touring the Continent for his health.

I mentioned David Lawrence's comment in his Friend's School address that after coming back from France even a dirty railroad station in the West was a welcome sight as compared with the pitiful condition of everything in France and Belgium. The Sergeant agreed to this with the comment that "everything looks good in America." I then asked him if he cared to leave home any more and a slow smile came to his face and he said that he allowed he was back for good.

This exchange of commonplaces simply expresses the type of mentality that seemed to me to characterize this man of deeds rather than of words. He is intelligent but not outspoken and probably has had less education than his intelligence warrants. Calmness best describes his attitude of mind and it is easy to see that he faces the world with full confidence in himself and a firm belief that things will come out right. He had been called a conscientious objector, but his record shows that his scruples simply apply to Germans and, as I also told someone, he impresses me as a fellow who takes whatever comes his way—including Germans. He is the type of American that we can well be proud of, and I think has perhaps offset in the minds of Europeans the type represented before the war by so many of the tourist Americans.

In short, while there is little about York to suggest the hero who personally made such an inroad upon the German army, there is nothing about him to shake anyone's belief that he is actually the man who did all of the things recorded in the magazine and newspaper accounts.

The statement by Generalissimo Foch that what Sergeant York did was "the greatest thing ever accomplished by any soldier of any of the armies in Europe" may seem superlative praise for this plain Southerner from eastern Tennessee, yet the whole world has accorded no less degree of praise to another simple-minded and modest-spoken American born less than 100 miles across the Kentucky line, the greatest figure in our other great war.

SENIOR COMMENCEMENT SPEAKERS.

The six Seniors who are to speak at the Commencement Day Exercises have been appointed as follows: Miss Elizabeth R. Eames, Miss Belle N. Longley, Miss Josephine Rice, Sidney P. Wyman, Gordon E. Gates, and Ralph H. Drew.

THE SECOND MASSACHUSETTS TRIP.

It's 'happened.' What? Why, the second Massachusetts trip of the baseball nine. And the pessimistic ones say the results of the trip are quite what they expected them to be—in other words, the "I told you so" persons are saying that they knew all along that the second trip would be a repetition of the first. Of course, we canna' dispute them; they know(?).

However, disregarding the "whys and wherefores" of the trip, the Colby nine came back from the week's campaign with only one game to its credit. Our first opponent was Holy Cross, which always has a crack ball team. We found this out when she swamped us, May 28th, 16 to 0. Next, our men crossed bats with the Boston College team and again we lost, this time 10 to 2. On Memorial Day our team went out to Amherst, and after looking the Mass. "Aggy" men over, decided that there was a chance for an easy victory. Maybe the day had something to do with it; at any rate, the Blue and Gray triumphed with a 5 to 1 score. Next day, the 31st, Brown met us "on the field of honor." The Brunonians managed to bring in three runs the first two innings. Hamer, who pitched the first two innings, was relieved and Bucknam went in, holding the Providence men to one hit the remainder of the game. Brown scored once in the seventh, but Colby was unable to bring in a single run. Brown won with a 4 to 0 score.

No one seems to understand why our team, composed of last year's men, failed to "come across." Something was lacking—pep, team-work, lack of proper support by the student body, or a hundred other things. However, the season's nearly over, and Colby doesn't stand where she SHOULD stand, where she COULD stand. The nine next year will have to vindicate Colby's "ancient glory," and bring the championship where it easily might have been this year—to Colby.

SOPHOMORE DECLAMATION.

The annual Sophomore Declamation was held in the chapel on Monday evening, there being nine speakers on the program, five women and four men. For the men, first prize of ten dollars was awarded to Harold C. Marden, '21, and second prize of five dollars was given to Stanley R. Black, '21. For the women, first prize of ten dollars was presented to Miss Clara Wightman, '21, and second prize of five dollars was awarded to Miss Bernice B. Butler, '21. President Roberts presided.

The work of the present editor has been done under difficulties, which have not been apparent perhaps to many, and which therefore has made criticism easy. The discouragements have been many. But an honest and heartfelt effort has been made to make the ECHO a factor in the life of Colby students. The editor hopes that his work has not

Interest in the non-athletic activities has lagged. The Echo and the Oracle have been published as usual. The Musical Clubs had a very successful year, and gave some excellent concerts. But the other activities have not been revived.

College spirit on the whole has been rather dormant. But with the coming of another year, with the athletic prospects bright, with the hope for a large enrollment of both old and new men, a big year can be expected. All of us should plan to return with the intention of taking a more lively interest in college life and activities and should plan to do all in our power to make Colby what she was before the war.
