Terry Winters: Prints: 1999-2014 Staatliche Graphische Sammlung (2014)

Terry Winters made his first print in 1982, the same year he debuted a closely related group of paintings composed of imagery suggestive of elemental biological forms at the brink of emergence. Since that year, printmaking has been integral to his explorations of abstraction. In 1998 the Detroit Institute of Art recognized Winters's accomplishments as a printmaker by presenting a retrospective of his fine art editions and by publishing a related print catalogue raisonné. Conceived as a second volume to this publication, Terry Winters Prints: 1999-2014 documents the last 15 years of Winters's printmaking. Finch, the Lunder Curator of American Art at the Colby College Museum of Art, notes that Winters's principal subject has not changed. It is still, as he has observed, "architecture, how form reflects ideas about life."

Finch is coauthor of this important volume with Michael Semff. In addition to 50 reproductions, the book includes 26 brief essays Finch has written about specific artworks. She also compiled and edited the catalogue raisonné section of the book, which includes detailed descriptions of the 70 print editions that Winters has created since 1999.

The book's publication coincides with the Terry Winters show at the Colby College Museum of Art, which runs through May 10.

French Colonial Soldiers in German Captivity during World War II

Cambridge University Press (2014)

Nearly 100,000 French colonial soldiers were captured by Nazi Germany during World War II. Scheck's meticulous research shows that the German treatment of the French colonial soldiers, many from North and West Africa, began with abuse at German hands. But treatment improved to the point that French authorities in 1945 suspected there was a German plot to instigate a rebellion in the French empire. Scheck shows how the colonial prisoners' call for equal rights at the war's end brought them into conflict with French officials bent on returning the former prisoners to their former roles.

Tanya Sheehan (Art)
Photography,
History, Difference
Dartmouth College Press
(2015)

As editor of this essay collection, Sheehan brings together a group of scholars to examine contemporary efforts to take a different approach to photography and its histories. What are the implications of histories that are regional, thematic, or global? What of other forms of difference, such as race, class, gender, and sexuality? The essays represent new ways of thinking about photography and its histories.

Photography and Its Origins

Routledge (2015)

Sheehan, with Andrés Mario Zervigón, is editor of this collection of 16 original essays from prominent and emerging voices in the field of photography studies. Recent decades have seen a flourishing interest in and speculation about the origins of photography. The book reframes interest in photography's beginnings in historiographical terms, shedding new light on old questions about histories and their writing.

Marine Historical Ecology in Conservation

University of California Press (2015)

McClenachan is coeditor of this volume, which focuses on innovative ways that historical ecology can be applied to improve today's conservation and management efforts. With success stories and applied solutions, the authors focus on four key challenges: supporting endangered species, conserving fisheries, restoring damaged ecosystems, and engaging the public.

Montaigne, écrivain de la conciliation

Classiques Garnier
(2014)

Throughout the 16th century, the Wars of Religion set French Protestants and Catholics at each other's throats. Dionne's new book examines the conciliatory role played by Montaigne, the first modern skeptic, who embraced diversity and tolerance in his Essays. Montaigne called upon his readers to reform themselves as individuals, so as to create a sense of individual responsibility by espousing pluralism. Embracing skepticism and accepting Socratic recognition of one's own ignorance were key steps in the process. Only thus could France hope to re-establish mutual trust among her citizens as the essential foundation of a community.

Haunted (The Arnaud Legacy)

Kensington Books
(2015)

Writing as Lynn Carthage, novelist Mailman has created a neo-Gothic thriller for young adults. The book follows 16-year-old Phoebe Irving as she leaves home in San Francisco for her stepfather’s ancestral mansion in rural England. As the locals whisper about Madame Arnaud, the manor’s notorious original owner, stories emerge about missing children and vengeful ghosts. Phoebe must protect her little sister, and herself.

Lean on Jesus: Christian Women in the Workplace

WestBow Press
(2014)

Hoeller, an attorney, has written a guide for Christian women in the workplace. Many Christian women leave the business world for nonprofits and other humanitarian organizations, she writes. Her book is intended to help women transform the business world rather than leave it behind.
