Ruth Robinson Nivison: News of the death of Edwin Arlington Robinson's niece in Saratoga, California, on December 23, 1971, arrived too late to be included in our March issue. Friend as well as benefactor, Mrs. Nivison was largely responsible for the premier collection of Robinson literary materials now in the room dedicated to his memory in the Colby College Library. Most applicable to her continuing influence is Samuel Rogers' line: "To know her was to love her."

Who's Who: Since his last appearance in CLQ, A. F. Cassis has been promoted to associate professor of English at the University of Lethbridge in Alberta, Canada. He received B.A. with honors at Ain Shams University, Cairo, and a diploma in education and psychology there; Ph.D. at the University of Dublin. He has recently published translations from the Arabic in Literature East and West and Contemporary Literature in Translation.

Robert J. Scholnick is preparing the Edmund Clarence Stedman volume in Twayne's United States Authors Series. Now assistant professor of English at the College of William and Mary, he took the bachelor's at University of Pennsylvania, master's and doctor's at Brandeis University. His essay on Whitman appeared last month in American Literature.

Completely Canadian in orientation, Mary-Ann Stouck of Simon Fraser University earned B.A. at McMaster University and M.A. at the University of Toronto, where she is currently pursuing the doctorate at the Graduate Centre for Medieval Studies. Two more essays on Cather's Archbishop, written in collaboration with her husband, are forthcoming in the University of Toronto and the Arizona quarterlies.

As much Pennsylvania as Mrs. Stouck is Canada, Irma S. Lustig garnered her degrees at Temple University and the University of Pennsylvania, has taught at both institutions, at West Chester State College, and presently Bryn Mawr. Her special man (after Mr. Lustig) is James Boswell, about whom she has written for PMLA, Studies in English Literature, Modern Language Review, and has in progress a volume of his journals for the Yale Editions of the Private Papers of James Boswell, in association with Frederick A. Pottle.
