

Colby

Colby Magazine

---

Volume 105
Issue 3 Summer 2017

Article 19

---

July 2017

Editor's Note

Follow this and additional works at: <https://digitalcommons.colby.edu/colbymagazine>

---

Recommended Citation

(2017) "Editor's Note," Colby Magazine: Vol. 105 : Iss. 3 , Article 19.

Available at: <https://digitalcommons.colby.edu/colbymagazine/vol105/iss3/19>

This Department is brought to you for free and open access by the Colby College Archives at Digital Commons @ Colby. It has been accepted for inclusion in Colby Magazine by an authorized editor of Digital Commons @ Colby.

EDITOR'S NOTE

CONTRIBUTORS

Sue Repko ("Nature and Nurture," P. 42) is a freelance writer, teacher, and member of the American Institute of Certified Planners. She is the author of Legendary Locals of Pottstown, PA

(Arcadia). Her work has appeared in Princeton Alumni Weekly, The Gettysburg Review, The Common, and other literary journals.

Helen Freund ("GoodWorks," P. 31) is an award-winning journalist who works and resides in New Orleans. She writes about food and dining, culture, environmental issues, and criminal justice. Her work has appeared in the Times-Picayune, the New Orleans Advocate, the New York Post, Reuters, Time Inc., Gambit Weekly, VICE, Cosmopolitan, and Seattle Magazine, among others.

Caitlin Rogers '19 ("Up to Code," P. 48) is a global studies and east Asian studies major from Denver, Colo. She is design editor and former staff writer for the Colby Echo. In high school she was involved with the school literary magazine, but resigned after telling an author "bourgeoisie" was not a word. She still is embarrassed by this.

I wish I'd known Floyd Harding '45.

Harding, who died in April, was a first-generation college student, the 11th of 12 children raised on a dairy farm in Albion, Maine. He worked his way through a couple of years of Colby milking cows at a farm owned by a professor and almost got in trouble after students wrangled a cow from the same farm up the stairs of the belfry of the chapel. Harding professed his innocence, saying he just milked the cows and never, ever brought one to college.

Another sort of innocence was lost soon after, as Harding joined the Army in fall of 1943. College hijinks was replaced by the bloody Battle of the Bulge, where he was captured by the Germans during their counterattack in the Ardennes Forest. Harding's father received a telegram in Albion. The yellowed document is in Harding's alumni folder:

THE SECRETARY OF WAR DESIRES ME TO EXPRESS HIS DEEP REGRET THAT YOUR SON PRIVATE FIRST CLASS FLOYD L HARDING HAS BEEN REPORTED MISSING IN ACTION TWENTY ONE DECEMBER IN GERMANY. ...

Harding was taken with other prisoners to Dresden, where he remained during the Allied firebombing of the city in 1945. His barracks-mate, Kurt Vonnegut, recreated the experience vividly—POWs and guards huddled together in basements as the bombs rained down—in his novel Slaughterhouse Five. Harding later summed up his war experience more succinctly in a Colby questionnaire: "U.S. Army, Infantry, Corporal."

Enough said.

Harding remained very connected to Colby over the years, despite the fact that he didn't resume his studies here. (With other alumni veterans, he was awarded a bachelor's degree in 1989.). After the war Harding took courses in Florida, got his law degree from Boston University, and moved to Presque Isle, Maine, where he had a successful law practice with his son Alan Harding '75. (A grandson was named Colby, recognizing Floyd Harding's affection for the school). The elder Harding also was a state senator, which allowed him to advocate for Aroostook County. He was instrumental in establishing a program for disabled residents, a community college, and the University of Maine at Presque Isle. After the Air Force base closed there, he helped turn the property into a vocational school.

Doing good was a big part of Harding's life, as it is for many Colbians. Recognizing that, we've added a standing feature, beginning with this issue. Pediatrician Kim Mukerjee '06 appears on P. 31 in this issue and in Colby online in reference to her important work with immigrant children in New Orleans.

But Floyd Harding deserves mention, too. He appears here representing all who have done good before.

Gerry Boyle '78, P'06
Managing Editor