CONTRIBUTORS TO THIS ISSUE

DIANA DE ARMAS WILSON teaches Renaissance Studies in the English Department at the University of Denver. Her Allegories of Love: Cervantes's Persiles and Sigismunda (Princeton UP, 1991) proffered readers what George Mariscal called a “liberal feminist Cervantes.” She was guest editor for the special quinqucentenary issue of the Journal of Hispanic Philology (1992). Along with the late Ruth El Saffar, she coedited Quixotic Desire: Psychoanalytic Perspectives on Cervantes (Cornell UP, 1993). Her most recent editing project is the new Norton Critical Edition of Don Quijote, using Burton Raffel's American-English translation, forthcoming in 1998. Her essay for this collection is part of a longer study on “Cervantes, the Novel, and the New World.”

ROBERTO IGNACIO DÍAZ is Assistant Professor of Spanish and Comparative Literature at the University of Southern California. He is presently writing a book on multilingualism in Spanish American literature.

GUSTAVO PÉREZ FIRMAT teaches in the Department of Romance Studies at Duke University. Among his many publications are Idle Fictions: The Hispanic Vanguard Novel, 1926-1934 (1982), Literature and Liminality: Festive Readings in the Hispanic Literary Tradition (1986), The Cuban Condition: Translation and Identity in Modern Cuban Literature (1989), Do the Americas Have a Common Literature? (1990), Life on the Hyphen: The Cuban-American Way (1994), and most recently Next Year in Cuba: A Cubano's Coming-of-Age in America (1995).

JORGE OLIVARES, Allen Family Professor of Latin American Literature at Colby College, is the author of La novela decadente en Venezuela (1984) and of articles on Modernismo and contemporary narrative fiction. He is presently working on a book on Reinaldo Arenas, the Cuban writer.

BETTY SASAKI is Assistant Professor of Spanish at Colby College. She has written articles on Spanish poetry and prose of the early modern period, multiculturalism, and Asian American literature.
