THE PURE IN HEART.

BY ALICE CARY.

"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God."

I naked the angels in my prayer, With bitter tears and pain, To show mine eyes the kingdom where The Lord of glory reigns.

I said, my way with doubts is dim, My heart is sick with fear;
O come, and help me build to him A tabernacle here!

The storms of sorrow wildly beat,
The clouds with death are chill;
Along to hear his voice so sweet, Who whispered—Tence, be still?

The angels said, God giveth you His love—what more is ours?
And even as the gentle dew Descends upon the flowers,

His grace descends and as of old,
He walks with man apart, Keeping the promise as of old,
With all the pure in heart.

Thou needest not ask the angels where His habitation be,
Keep thou thy spirit clean and fair,
And he shall dwell with thee.

THE LOVE SPELL.

BY COLEMAN MARY.

CHAPTER II.

WHAT could induce Frederick Heywood, a wealthy man of the world, to select the orphan Rachel for his wife? And why did she give encouragement to a man she disliked? Very natural questions these; but, in the records of society, it is easy to find a satisfactory answer.

Let it not be supposed that Frederick was either ugly or disagreeable; that is, according to certain well-established ideas. His countenance would have expressed the highest qualities of manhood had they existed in his mind; but the fine, expansive brow was only a throne of pride; from his dark, brilliant eye was seldom emitted a ray of purity; and contempt for the holiest feelings of humanity had left its impression upon a mouth of classic beauty, from which the admiring listener might else have waited to hear words of living truth, always so impressive when accompanied by the music of an eloquent soul. Alas, for human idolatry, the outward form is too often worshipped, the inward life utterly disregarded. Frederick Heywood was the idol of many a heart, where a thought of Albert Murray was deemed unworthy to enter.

"Wooded and won at last," was the half-mu-tered opinion of this self-confident man of the world, as he sat alone in his private apartment the evening before that interview with Rachel which he supposed would decide her fate unalterably. "It is true, she is a little wilful, and too dignified in manners for her present position; but when she is elevated to the eminence

I have chosen for her, that which is now a fault will be perfectly consistent. As to her will, I can easily bend that. What a jealous dog poor Albert will be when he knows! He little suspects I have penetrated his secret; and how sweet a revenge will be mine for those virtuous reproaches he favored me with a few years ago! Why, he loves the girl as his own life, and I have played my part so skillfully my lessons sink into her heart unsuspected.

She already treats him with scorn, and, when she is mine, I can govern her every action with a look. Her sense of gratitude, too, will urge her to yield obedience. Yes, I was right, after all, in choosing a woman without wealth. I shall thus escape the opposition I dreaded in a marriage with Laura Denbigh, who is a spoiled child and an heiress. It is the very best choice

I could have made."

With a smile of self-congratulation, the young man rose, and, after pacing the room a few moments, glowing shadows succeeded the brightness of hope. His brow was darkened by a frown whose fierceness could not be controlled, and the closely compressed lips told of some purpose requiring firmness and courage of no ordinary kind.

"It shall be so," he exclaimed. "I must see her again, if only to prevent any unpleasant after-thoughts. To-night the darkness is favorable for such a visit."

In a short time, Frederick Heywood was wending his way through one of the most wretched districts of the city, a neighborhood where, but for the devoted spirit of the Christian missionary, a stranger would not dare to venture, so fearful was the appearance of many of those abodes, where sin and sorrow deprive the word home of its hallowed significance, or, by their striking contrast, exhibit with greater power the pure and loving spirit dwelling untouched and serene amid such unholy influences.

At length he stopped before a low, cheerless building, consisting of some six or eight dwellings huddled together without order or design.

Rapping gently at the door of one of these, an old woman appeared, who admitted him without uttering a word; then, as the dim lamp cast a flickering light upon the cold, bare walls, and a few wooden chairs which, with one small table, were the only articles of furniture the room contained, she stood looking upon her visitor with a dreamy, spiritless gaze, as though waiting for permission before she ventured to speak.

It was a scene never to be forgotten, that poor, worn countenance pleading for consolation, that crushed form bending under a weight of sorrow too heavy for human succor; while the tall, graceful figure of the young man, who stood with head uncovered and his cloak thrown carelessly aside, appeared to increase in height as he contemplated with haughty condescension

WATERVILLE, MAINE.....FRIDAY, OCT. 21, 1864.

NO. 16.

"It is too true," she answered with bitterness.

"I am forsaken by those who know me in happier days—all but my poor, faithful old grandmother; and you come to add to my misery by reminding me of it."

You mistake me, Marion. I have no other wish than to save you from want—to raise you from this state of degradation to—

"Silence, I command you!" interrupted the young woman, with startling energy, as a su-perhuman strength appeared suddenly diffusing itself through her frame, and with head erect and eyes flashing with the indignant consciousness of an injured soul, she proudly confronted him.

"Hush," he continued, in a soothing voice, for he was awed by her manner; "you are excited. Believe me, I did not mean to add to your unhappiness. I would be your friend.

Take this pocket-book. Nay, I entreat. It will relieve you from the labors that are wearing your life away. You shall receive the same sum annually, so long as you remain silent."

While speaking, he drew forth a pocket-book, wherein he had placed bank bills to a large amount, and attempted to press it into her hand; but she recoiled as though a serpent had stung her, and threw it aside reproachfully.

In the solemn silence that followed, the proud man felt the powerlessness of his boasted wealth. He had hoped to bribe Marion into silence, and to palliate his injustice to her by this appeal; but he was now to learn that a true woman, though fallen, can suffer all the horrors of poverty, and can live on scorned and forsaken—ay, meet death in its worst form, rather than dependent upon her betrayer after he has cruelly cast her from his heart.

As Marion stood before Frederick, regarding him with an eye so searching, it seemed to penetrate the deep secrets of his soul, something like the voice of remorse whispered to him of the time when her purest hopes were confided to him, in all the warmth and simplicity of young affection; but he was too experienced a man of the world for such thoughts to have an abiding effect, and he spoke again, calm and undisturbed, as though addressing himself to an indifferent person.

"Then you refuse to accept my offer, Marion?"

There was a momentary struggle, a strong effort to stifle a rising sob of agony, and outwardly Marion was as calm as her companion.

Stern and collected, with her hands tightly pressed upon her bosom, she met his gaze un-shrinking, and answered in a solemn, earnest manner, that proved her decision final—

"I do refuse sir. You are the last man in the world from whom I would consent to receive assistance."

He moved towards the door with an air of resentment; but she detained him by placing her hand upon his arm. It was a touch so light as scarcely to be felt; but there was a power in her every motion that was irresistible, and the weak woman triumphed over the iron will of the worldling.

"This is our last meeting, Frederick Heywood—at least in this world"—and here the voice of Marion thrilled upon his heart with terrible significance; "therefore I would speak as though we stood together upon the verge of eternity. Think not I cherish one revengeful feeling for the cruel wrong you have inflicted upon me. May God forgive you as I have done, and as I hope for forgiveness myself!"

"Marion, this is childish. I am not accustomed to listen to such language."

"And for that reason ought you now to hear it; ay, even if repeated a hundred times could it move you to a sense of justice. My own sorrows will soon be hushed in the grave, and my future lot is in the hands of One more merciful than his creatures; but for others, Frederick, I would plead, that they may not be dealt with as you have dealt with me.

And for that chosen one who may shortly become your wife, let me beseech you to—

"My wife!" he exclaimed. "Who told you this? By what right do you talk to me thus?"

Ask yourself by what right, vain man. Bid conscience answer that. "I will know whether she is to be deceived in supposing you a generos, virtuous being who loves her as man should love the woman of his choice. I suspect your motives. I have long suspected them; but Rachel Weston shall not be a victim to such base deception."

"Marion, beware how you provoke my wrath. You dare not interfere in this matter, or attempt to pollute the ears of Miss Weston with a tale like yours. She shall be mine, lately closed upon him; but soon the unnatural strength which had upheld her during this agonizing interview gave way, and she fell upon the floor in a state of deathlike insensibility.

CHAPTER III.

Rachel Weston and her aunt had been engaged, during the early part of a leisurely morning, in that small talk so commonly resorted to when uncongenial minds are obliged to hold converse with each other. Miss Knight, having exhausted her stock of scandal and complaints, at length, relapsed into silence, to the relief of Rachel, whose heart was overflowing with a rush of emotions it called forth all her fortitude to restrain. That evening would decide her future destiny, and now she experienced the most chilling consciousness of a terrible indifference it almost maddened her to contemplate. Her mind was a prey to the most fearful reflections, and she sat forgetful of everything around her till her aunt suddenly appeared equipped for a walk, and with an expression upon her face at once grave and ridiculous.

"Why, Rachel, one would suppose you were preparing for a funeral; but this is always your temper after visiting those dull, spiritless Murrays. As for Albert, he is a most uninteresting, stupid young man. You know, my dear, I always said he would turn out a simpleton, when he used to visit us so constantly during his boyhood. It is no more than I expected. Young men nowadays are mere ciphers compared with what they were—I cannot say exactly how many years ago. I remember when Colonel Marvel threatened to fight a duel with the Hon. Francis Gray, because I complained of his rudeness in daring to remonstrate with me on some subject or other. I think it was regarding my preference for a gentleman infinitely superior to them both; but I am not quite sure of that. Let me see."

"Never mind troubling yourself to remember, aunt," said Rachel; "that is not so important as the fact of the duel. Were either of the gentlemen hurt?"

"My dear niece, you mistake me. I did not say the duel actually took place; but most likely it would, if I had not interfered."

"Most likely," responded the girl in a listless tone. "Do not let me detain you from your walk. I must beg to be excused this morning."

"Well, well, if you desire it, certainly; but do not give way to this gloomy mood, Rachel.

Mr. Heywood will expect to find you particularly interesting this evening, and you are ruining your good looks, I assure you."

"Am I?" inquired Rachel, in a manner that plainly indicated the most perfect indifference to her own appearance, and she looked up flippantly as she added, "So much the better."

"Now, my love, that was a beautiful and very proper expression, suited to some occasions; but it is not advisable to do anything to provoke Frederick at present. Wait a little till you are invested with full power. If you begin too soon, he may take offence and marry me. Good-morning. I think you had better wear your black satin dress; it becomes you so well."

No sooner had Miss Knight left the house than Rachel flew to the solitude of her own chamber, and throwing herself upon a couch, indulged the distress she had striven to conceal from every eye.

She did not weep for the conflict of her soul so severe for the softer feelings to gain ascendancy; but there she lay, completely prostrated by that long-hidden sorrow, her face buried within her hands, and her rich, dark hair drooping in wild disorder; while now and then a convulsive movement betrayed the agony of a spirit wrestling with some evil power that strove for mastery. After a long struggle, she became more composed; but, when she arose and moved toward a mirror to arrange her dis-ordered tress, she started at the haggard features reflected there, and tried to busy herself in preparing for her evening toilet, so that some traces of the wild grief she had experi-

TESTIMONY.—Here is testimony, from a man who is well known in our village, to the skill and success of Dr. Carpenter, who is specially treating diseases of the eye and ear, and catarrh, at his rooms, Continental House. We shall be disappointed if the Doctor's patients do not present many such evidences of his success, before he leaves Waterville.

For the last four years I have suffered exceedingly with my eyes. There has been a film growing over them, and a thickening of the eyelids. Sometimes they were affected with a nervous twitching and a dry itching sensation, almost intolerable, and recently they have become swollen and inflamed.

I was also afflicted with Chronic Catarrh to such an extent that I had discharges or droppings from the head to the throat, a sensation of heat and fullness through the nose and a dull depressive pain through the forehead and upper portion of my head. Receiving one of Dr. Carpenter's circulars, I commenced treatment with him one week ago, and to-day all pain and inflammation is gone from my eyes, and as near as I can judge they are as well as they ever were. My catarrh is also gone. No discharge now of any pains in the head.

U. S. 7-30 Loan.

The Secretary of the Treasury gives notice that subscriptions will be received for Coupon Treasury Notes, payable three years from Aug. 10th, 1864, with semi-annual interest at the rate of seven and three-tenths per cent. per annum, principal and interest both to be paid in lawful money.

These notes will be convertible at the option of the holder at maturity, into six per cent. gold bearing bonds, payable not less than five nor more than twenty years from their date, as the Government may elect. They will be issued in denominations of $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $5,000, and all subscriptions must be for fifty dollars or some multiple of fifty dollars.

The notes will be transmitted to the owners, free of transportation charges as soon after the receipt of the original Certificates of Deposit as they can be prepared.

As the notes draw interest from August 15, persons making deposits subsequent to that date must pay the interest accrued from date of note to date of deposit.

Parties desiring to treat—five thousand dollars and upwards for these notes at any one time will be allowed a commission of one-quarter of one per cent, which will be paid by the Treasury Department upon a receipt for the amount, certified to by the officer with whom the deposit was made. No deductions for commissions must be made from the deposits.

SPECIAL ADVANTAGES OF THIS LOAN.
It is a NATIONAL SAVINGS BANK, offering a higher rate of interest than any other, and the best security. Any savings bank which pays its depositors in U. S. Notes, considers that it is paying the best security in the medium of the country, and it cannot pay in any other, for its own assets are either in government securities or in notes and bonds payable in government paper.

It is equally convenient as a temporary or permanent investment. The notes can always be sold for within a fraction of their face and accumulated interest, and are the best security with banks as collateral for discounts.

Convertible into a Six per cent. 5-20 Gold Bond.
In addition to the very liberal interest on the notes for three years, this privilege of conversion is now worth about three per cent. per annum, for the current rate for 5-20 bonds is not less than NINE PER CENT. PREMIUM, and before the war the premium on six per cent. U. S. stocks was over twenty per cent. It will be seen that the actual profit on this loan, at the present market rate, is not less than ten per cent. per annum.

Its exemption from State or Municipal Taxation.
But aside from all the advantages we have enumerated, a special Act of Congress exempts all bonds and Treasury notes from local taxation. On the average this exemption is worth about two per cent. per annum, according to the rate of taxation in different parts of the country.

It is believed that no securities offer so great inducements to lenders as those issued by the government. In all other forms of indebtedness, the faith or ability of private parties, or stock companies, or separate communities, only is pledged for payment, while the whole property of the country is held to secure the discharge of all the obligations of the United States.

While the government offers the most liberal terms for its loans, it believes that the very strongest appeal will be to the loyalty and patriotism of the people.

Duplicate certificates will be issued for all deposits. The party depositing must endorse upon the original certificate the denomination of the notes required, and whether they are to be issued in blank or payable to order. When so endorsed they must be sent to the officer receiving the deposit, to be forwarded to the Treasury Department.

Recommendations will be made by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington, the several Assistant Treasurers and designated Depositories, and by the
