4-14-1895

To Harry de Forest Smith - April 14, 1895

Edwin Arlington Robinson

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.colby.edu/robinson_transcriptions

Part of the Literature in English, North America Commons

Recommended Citation
https://digitalcommons.colby.edu/robinson_transcriptions/171

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the The Letters of Edwin Arlington Robinson: A Digital Edition at Digital Commons @ Colby. It has been accepted for inclusion in Edwin Arlington Robinson Letters and Transcriptions by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Colby.
TO HARRY DE FOREST SMITH

My dear Smith,

Your letter and the Book Buyer came last evening and paid me well for paddling down town through the mud and rain for whatever I might find. I like the Book Buyer for what it is, but it seems to me that one might naturally look for a little more serious criticism of Ibsen than that of Little Eyolf in the spring number. Ibsen has proved himself beyond all questioning to be one of the greatest men of the time (or any other time) and it becomes rather nauseating nowadays to read the same brainless twaddle that we read five years ago. The criticism of Vistas, on the other hand, was peculiarly fair and generous,--coming from the same pen, or apparently so.

I have finished L’Impériouse Bonté, and do not hesitate to call it a great book; but, as I wrote to Ford. I am not so sure that it is a great novel. It deals with the dark puzzles of life in a way that must make a man think, but it is never fanatical or illogical. The ruling motive of the book, as you already know, is the salvation of mankind, or the elevation, which is the same thing, through man’s charity for his brothers. The author, in his honest enthusiasm, brings out mans brotherhood with all things that are—earth, air, sky, trees and every thing else. The universality of the book is astonishing, and we feel and see the hand that moves the world "la main que pousse le monde" as we read it. I wish it were obtainable in translation, but I am afraid that that will remain an impossibility. To reproduce any thing like the authors style which is figurative and impressionistic to the last extreme (whatever that is!) without ever becoming any thing like "decadent," would involve more labor and patience than the average translator can possibly afford. And more than that there are many passages which are not of the kind we call "pure and unobjectionable" although every word has its moral purpose and the book as a whole is a magnificent plea for a clean life in a clean world. If you take it into your head to learn French again be sure and read this novel.

---

a WA omits "town".

I have not read much more—in fact nothing but scattered pieces here and there in papers and things. Some day when I partly get over my antipathy toward translations I may read Faust, but that time will not come soon. I have been looking at "Sintram" and "Auslagas Knight" but neither of them seem to attract me. My love for romance, pure & simple, is almost gone from me and I hardly know whether to be glad or sorry. There is something in "Undine" and "Picciola" that stays with me and there may be the same quality in Sintram. Some day I shall find out—some day when I feel like it more than I do just at present.

I have got pretty well through the "creative" part of the book. I shall try to publish in the fall (or as soon as it is ready); the rest will be revising and rewriting—a long and hard summer's work and all, perhaps, for nothing. But there is one grand consolation: if it is for nothing, another may be for something else. I have made up my mind that I am going to do this thing, if that is all there is to it. Some day you will see an a printed edition of "Scattered Lives" and though it be printed on toilet paper with a one-hand printing press. That is, of course, if I live and am well for a certain length of time.—Last week I sent "Thom[as] Hardy" to the Critic people but have not yet heard from it.

I have known of Freytag's Technique of the Drama for a long time but did not know that it had been translated (By "a long time" I mean since my first year at Harvard). I am glad that you are going to have it, because I can borrow it of you sometime.

---I have just found it in "5000 Books" (Curtis Publishing Co)--$1.15—

---3b---

---4c---

b Written vertically.

c Written vertically.
McEwan’s translation. 5000 Books is well worth having for a reference, but it contains some crazy selections and more than crazy omissions. That, however, is only to be expected. My catalogue contains 272 pages is finely printed and has many good portraits—one in particular of Emerson which is refreshingly human and, I hope, authentic. Our old friend Dr Doyle is there, along with Brander Matthews and nearly two hundred others. The general appearance of the thing strongly suggests Houghton-Mifflin’s catalogue. The print is some finer, but quite as clear. You can get it for a postal card.—Don’t forget the Bookman—when you have squeezed it to your own satisfaction. Any thing like that coming through the mail tickles me more than a little. You speak of the [stone] game as if it were my work. I would not rob Joe of his laurels.

Yours most sincerely,
E.A.R.

Gardiner,
14 April - 1895

NOTESd

1. Both romantic tales by Friedrich Fouque, Baron de La Motte.
2. US reads "Scattered Lines."
3. EAR’s sonnet "For a Book by Thomas Hardy" appeared in The Critic, XXIV (November 23, 1895), 348.
4. US reads "stans game [?]." {WA reads "sten's [?] game".}