«Photos | Lydia Ball '13 grew up dreaming of a life as a globetrotting photographer and herpetologist. “The Forests of Gondar” (page 46) describes her environmental science work, including studies of amphibians, in northern Ethiopia. And her images—of the people and the terrain, the ancient Ethiopian Orthodox Christian churches and the timeless forests surrounding them—prove her qualifications as a photographer. Homogeneity is on the rise as globalization comes to define the world in the 21st century, but the experiences and striking visuals captured in an online gallery of Ball's photos show a landscape, culture, and artifacts that visitors have called “magical” and “otherworldly.”
