December 1970

Jewett to Guiney: An Earlier Letter

Edward H. Cohen

Follow this and additional works at: http://digitalcommons.colby.edu/cq

Recommended Citation
Colby Library Quarterly, series 9, no.4, December 1970, p.231-232

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by Digital Commons @ Colby. It has been accepted for inclusion in Colby Quarterly by an authorized administrator of Digital Commons @ Colby. For more information, please contact mfkelley@colby.edu.
beats all how word gets 'round when a Tory comes back to town!'” (825). How could Madam Wallingford have been so serenely unaware of the violence of the day?

The importance of family and good breeding governs the characters in The Tory Lover; gentle tolerance furnishes the tone; feminine distaste for violence curbs the action; unfamiliarity with romance restricts the love story; and only fate — exemplified in William Cowper’s “God moves in a mysterious way / His wonders to perform” — ties sections of the story together to create a semblance of unity of plot.

JEWETT TO GUINEY: AN EARLIER LETTER

By Edward H. Cohen

The extant letters of Sarah Orne Jewett to Louise Imogen Guiney, dating from 1894 to 1899, indicate that the two New Englanders were genuine friends and frequent companions in Boston’s literary circles.

Just when their acquaintance began is not certain. During the 1880s, when Miss Jewett’s reputation as an accomplished author of local color sketches was secure and Miss Guiney’s promise as a sensitive poet was apparent, mutual friends such as Annie Fields and Alice Brown — would have provided any needed introduction. Thus, the letter here recorded is offered as evidence that Sarah Jewett and Louise Guiney may have corresponded and met as early as 1891.

The letter itself bears the watermark of G.B. Hurd & Co., and is folded once on black-edged mourning stationery — signifying, perhaps, the death of Miss Jewett’s mother, in the autumn of 1891. Words inserted above the line by Miss Jewett have been lowered and bracketed.

1 Seven letters, in the Dinand Library of Holy Cross College, Worcester, Massachusetts. For a commentary on this collection, see William L. Lucey, “‘We New Englanders’: Letters of Sarah Orne Jewett to Louise Imogen Guiney,” American Catholic Historical Society of Philadelphia Records, LXX (March-June, 1959), 58-64.
Dear Miss Guiney

Mrs Fields and I wish so much that you would come to dine with us tomorrow — Saturday — at [quarter before] seven. It is Mrs Fields’s afternoon at home, so please come as early as you can! I am here only until the first of the week and we are to be quite by ourselves [tomorrow evening] — save for Miss Alice Longfellow who has not been well and is staying with Mrs Fields for awhile. If you do come I shall be sure to ask you to play us an old song!

Yours most truly
Sarah O. Jewett

2 The Boston home and literary salon of Annie Fields, widow of the eminent editor and publisher, James T. Fields. F.O. Matthiessen has written: “Even before the publisher’s death [in 1881] Sarah Jewett had begun to be a more frequent visitor in Charles Street, and now impalpably — Mrs. Fields was fifteen years older than Sarah — the two women were absorbed into a union that endured as long as their lives” (Sarah Orne Jewett [Boston, 1829], 71).

3 The 11th of December fell on a Friday not only in 1891 — the suggested date of this letter — but also in 1883 and 1903. In 1885 Miss Guiney’s only published volume of verse, Songs at the Start, would hardly have attracted much notice; by 1903, however, she had already retired to England, where she spent most of the remaining years of her life.

4 This letter is much more formal than those of the letters in the Dinand Library; later in the decade Miss Jewett was to address her friend: “My dear Louise,” “My dear friend,” “Dear friend and poet.” The implication is, of course, that this letter may represent Miss Guiney’s first invitation to the Charles Street coterie.

5 After Longfellow’s death in 1882, his eldest daughter was a frequent companion of Mrs. Fields.