home in the summer of 1929. On August 6, after presumably a number of invitations, Robinson somberly indited: "If you are a real friend of mine, and I know you are one, you will take me at my word in regard to visiting, and at the same time be assured of my complete appreciation of your hospitality. I have simply come to the time of life, or stage of decay, when visiting — no matter where — is a form of torture to me." Only two more letters followed. In the fall Variell suffered a minor stroke and he changed base permanently to Miami Beach, where he died April 16, 1940. Whatever underlay the cessation of this revived relationship at its seeming height (three reasons — expanding introversion, infirmity, distance — suggest themselves), it graphically illustrates by its character and content Robinson's self-shielding modus vivendi of archipelago friendships.

ADDITIONS TO THE ROBINSON COLLECTION: II

By RICHARD CARY

ALL FOUR ISSUES of Colby Library Quarterly in Edwin Arlington Robinson's centennial year of 1969 were devoted to essays on his life and literary works. Each issue also contained an annotated listing of books and periodicals inscribed by or to him, and of letters and manuscripts written by or pertaining to him then in Colby College Library. An auxiliary list appeared in the September 1971 issue.

Further additions to our collection of personalized Robinsoniana are itemized below, bringing the account up to date. Categories are the same in numeration and title as previously observed.
